Title	The political and social development
Brief description of the research project	The scholarships will mainly be aimed at forming a profile of scholars capable of dealing with problems related to the study of political and social development. The main research topics are the following: a) Democracy and social movements. This theme studies social movements, civil society, participatory democracy, political violence and new media with political and sociological approaches; b) International political economy. This topic looks at the transformations of capitalism, and in particular at economic internationalization (globalisation, European integration, global industries, finance, migrations), at changes in work (digitalisation, industrial relations, new forms of conflicts and inequalities) and at the governance of these processes through policies, institutions and collective action at national, international and subnational levels; c) Comparative politics and society. In this context, the research interests cover parties, interest groups, civil society and public opinion in a comparative perspective, with particular attention to emerging political actors and practices. The study and research program has a multidisciplinary and methodologically pluralistic profile. Fully taught in English and highly internationalised, the program combines structured teaching with close supervision of research projects. Following the best European practices in the field, it closely combines theoretical and empirical work, with attention to historical, institutional and cultural specificities. This line of training intervention is fully integrated with the PNRR guidelines and various development streams indicated therein.
